NEWHAM ASIAN WOMEN'S PROJECT

ABOUT US

Newham Asian Women's Project (NAWP) is a London based organisation specifically focusing on giving legal advice, support and advocacy to women of South Asian origin and was established in 1986. Although working predominantly at a local level, NAWP has influenced national debate on key issues, specifically pertaining to black and ethnic minority women. Due to our established history, community and professional credibility in supporting South-Asian women and their children experiencing violence in the home, NAWP has become the first port of call for many women in need of support and advice. NAWP's aim is to assist disadvantaged and socially excluded women towards a position where they are enabled to make informed choices regarding their lives.

SERVICES

The services provided by NAWP are open to all South Asian women living in the London Borough of Newham, irrespective of religion, caste, class, disability and sexuality. NAWP provides specific support services, appropriate to the needs of our client base and our organisational partners, including safe-housing, advice surgeries, counselling, education, training and career development opportunities. NAWP currently runs the following projects:

Refuge • Advice Service • Counselling • Training • Zindaagi
